Synopsis

Jagears Delivers a Wonderfully Romantic Read with a Hero and Heroine to Cheer For Evelyn Wisely has a heart for the orphans of Teaville and works at a local mansion that rescues children out of the town's red-light district and gives them a place to live. But her desire to help isn't limited to orphans. The owner of the mansion, Nicholas Lowe, is willing to help her try to get the women working in prostitution out of the district as well--if she can gain the cooperation and support of local businessmen to go against the rest of the community. David Kingsman has recently arrived in Teaville from Kansas City to help with one of his father's companies in town. While he plans on staying only long enough to prove his business merit to his father, he's shown interest in Evelyn's work and is intrigued enough by her to lend his support to her cause. They begin with the best of intentions, but soon the complications pile up and Evelyn and David's dreams look more unattainable every day. When the revelation of a long-held secret creates a seemingly insurmountable rift between them, can they trust God still has a good plan for them despite all that is stacked against them?

Customer Reviews

With A Love So True, readers are treated to unique and interesting new characters struggling to follow their dreams despite the odds. The plot twists and turns with some nice surprises, and with the pleasing inclusion of past heroes in the series. Once again readers are challenged in their thinking regarding morality, Christian responsibility and their attitude toward sinners caught in the web of sin. A fun and edifying read. In 1908 the red light district in Teaville leaves a trail of broken women, children and men in its wake. Evelyn Wisely has a burden to not only care for the orphans generated by this district but also help the prostitutes escape this wretched and self-destructive lifestyle. David Kingsman, a businessman temporarily residing in Teaville, takes an interest in the children, the mission and most particularly in Miss Evelyn Wisely. But the townspeople are set against the project, and Evelyn has a secret that holds David's attentions at bay.

This is Melissa Jagears's second book in the Teaville Moral Society Series. This second book can stand alone but I think it is enriched by knowing the characters in the first book, A Heart Most Certain. The story's setting is the 1908 era and features woman and children caught in the red-light district. I liked the way the romance between the characters in the book held my attention but also the inspiration of someone following their dream of helping those in need. Melissa inspires me again to see the world around me that is not like my world at all, but needs to be seen with eyes of love instead of judgement. This is definitely a five-star book that I recommend to anyone looking for a good historical inspiration read. I did receive a copy of this book from the author/publisher but my review is completely honest and without bias. The copy I received will go in my church's library. I also purchased the book in e-book format because it is easier for me to read. Either way I encourage you to get the book.

Another visit with our friends in Teaville, Kansas will help you realize God's timing is perfect and sometimes hard times are required to get us to the great gifts He has waiting! Ms Jagears has the ability to keep you guessing what will happen next and out of nowhere another twist appears! Her characters have become dear friends and so I wonder who will have the next adventure....Mercy, Sadie, Caroline? Although, I don't quilt, as many in the Teaville Moral Society do, I totally understand the dilemma when Charlie sewed her dress to the quilt again!

Take your time and savor the sweetness of this lovely story

A wonderful return to Teaville, Kansas 1908. I'll say this first in case anyone is wondering, this book is part of a series but it can easily be read as a stand alone. Next, let me say, I loved this book! There is so much that I want to say about this book but can't, I don't want to spoil anything for anyone else. I was very touched that David Kingsman was so willing to help a woman and boy he had only just met a few times. We really get to know him during this time. David was attracted to Evelyn but she would not let him past the very high walls around her heart. Slowly a friendship develops. I was frustrated with Evelyn, but she has a secret that no one knows, she will not allow herself to have a happy personal life. Her work with her parents at the orphanage and helping the children of the red-light district will have to be enough for her. With help from David, she is able to gain the support from other businessmen that Nicholas Lowe (the richest man in town and her boss) requires, for building a shelter for women who want to escape life in the district. It will take longer than Evelyn expects, years perhaps. The storytelling in this book is fantastic! Every character is well developed, even the children. Of course, we get to visit with the ladies of the Teaville Moral Society. I loved the revelation of Evelyn's long-held secret, it was not what I expected. The conclusion is a nice surprise too. I took advantage of 's Match Book Price and got both a paperback and Kindle copy!
