Synopsis

Vicki, a wealthy city-bred woman, is horrified when her husband accepts a pastorate in a small, dying town called Prince Crossing in Blackberry County. Not only is she in culture shock, but she must deal with the pressures of being a pastor's wife and the disapproval of those who don't understand her. Worst of all, will the town forgive her when she loses her focus and struggles with her faith in God himself?

Customer Reviews

Vicki had grown up in a wealthy family who never gave much thought to God. When she goes to college, she meets God on a personal level and her husband, James. She knows James plans to pastor in a more rural setting and she's always lived in the city, but she's unprepared for the vast differences and the things she's now expected to accept. The worst thing is James must give most of his time to the church, and she misses spending time with him. In fact, when problems seem to be hitting at every turn, she suddenly begins to question everything. I saw two grammatical errors.

"James' " was used for "James's" and "reigns" for "reins." I never heard of cooking a custard before putting it in the unit to make homemade ice cream either. The first part of the story moved extremely slowly for me, and it was hard to care for any of the characters. It did become a little better before the end. Still, nothing much occurred, and, when it did, the story still seemed to lack any tension. I kept hoping that some of the previous characters in the series might make an appearance, but they never did. I hesitate to give it only three stars, because I feel it is somewhat better than that, but it never made it to four stars for me, and I thought it was the weakest book in the series, although it is still worth reading.

The whole book is about hearing over and over what a misguided person Vicki is. Her husband never has any faults, everything is her fault. Nothing much happens throughout the book even though there is opportunity to develop a plot. Also, in a trilogy, you expect a cameo or two from characters from the previous books. This never happens which is disappointing as I found the other books more enjoyable.

This is a wonderful story of love in a small town--love between a husband and wife, love among church and community members, and most of all, love between God and His people.

Such a lovely story. Insightful and easy read. JoHannah writes in a way that keeps the pages turning! I want to search for casserole recipes now and find that peace again this story reminded me of. She has a unique way of weaving scripture into this story and for that it is satisfying on more than one level.

I really enjoyed this book. It's about a young Preacher and his wife who are just embarking on their service of ministry to the Lord. It's an exciting and frightening time in their lives. They're going to a start up church in a very small town. The Pastor is eager to put into action all he has learned about serving a church while he was at the Seminary. His wife, however, is the only child of a wealthy family who has always been accustomed to "the silver spoon " in her mouth. But, she loves her husband very much and the Lord, so she finally decides she wants to help make this new venture work! There are ups and downs along the way, plus a host of interesting characters. I found it to be a pleasant way to end my day.

I have yet to read a book by this author that I didn't care for, and this is no exception. Her characters are always interesting and real and it's a good story

This book was like an answer to prayer. It is a reminder how many times God forgives us and urges us to seek Him in our distress. As we each have our burdens and demons that threaten to separate us from our faith and make us more worldly than spiritual, so does this young pastor's wife who has been brought up with worldly wealth and an absence of God. Her choice to seek God's will for her leads her to a recurrent struggle to return to the comforts of her past life. God blesses her by bringing her back to Him. Her life becomes rich and full with friendship and blessings as she learns to be grateful for the simplicity and beauty in nature and a life of service.

Love all of the Blackberry County Chronicles. Also reading the Distant Shores Series by JoHannah Reardon. JoHannah brings God into each phase of her stories with bible based scriptures. Love all her works. Keep on writing JoHannah
