Customer Reviews

"The iconic landmarks for which Paris is known the world over rarely feature in the photography of Nichole Robertson - which is precisely what makes her imagery so compelling, irresistible and refreshingly different." - Nicola Williams, Art of the Weekend "She seeks out culture high and low, bits of nature thriving in the city and moments of human interaction. Neutral grays and browns are featured prominently in her work; bouncing against each other, like shades, they feel lively. Robertson's color-seeking approach is surprising, given the uniformly neutral shade that prevails in so much of Paris." - CNN Travel "This is a must-have in your design library as a color reference and for photographic inspiration." -- Design Muse "From Nichole Robertson, cofounder of the blog and design studio Little Brown Pen, comes Paris in Color, a book that presents the City of Light in all its enchanting hues. Including more than 150 pages of vivid photographs, this volume showcases Parisian design and architecture, its iconic monuments as well as its moments of quiet, accidental splendor. Robertson's work offers readers a color-coordinated tour of her favorite city, lovingly lingering on such staggering details as its scarlet Metro entrances and Wallis-blue doors." -- Lonny magazine "A feast of color-coordinated vignettes." -- LuckyMag.com

I'm consistently drawn to the way color contrasts Paris' neutral facades, the way layers of paint erode into a form of abstract art, and to the details that are often overshadowed by iconic landmarks. The photos offer candid glimpses of the thoughtful craftsmanship, pedestrian pleasures and gracefully worn textures that cumulatively capture the unmistakable charm of Paris. ã Æ - Nichole Robertson

This book was a Christmas gift for myself. My dream is to travel to Paris. The photographs capture Parisian life that while deeply rooted in its rich history, transcends seamlessly and elegantly to modern day France. This book is beautiful and inspiring.

Paris is one of my favorite cities and the photos capture the happy meanderers' visual serendipities in the neighborhoods and along the streets of the city. This type of imagery takes one back to "being there" which is a wonderful feeling - the the book is much less expensive than an air ticket!!!

Love how the author of the book curated the photos for it. Plus the layout of it and overall just looking at it is a pleasure. Although the subject of the photographs could have been slightly more interesting.

I really enjoy Nicole's work and the way she puts sets of photos together by color. It's a very clean, interesting way to view the prints. If you go on her websites, you can buy a set and have an instant collection, ready to hang on your wall that you didn't have to curate yourself. :) My only complaint with this book is that more of her work is not included. Nicole has a lot more to show than this, and although the price point was good (I purchased the digital version), I feel that the book was a bit skinny.

I stumbled upon Nichole's blog just a few months ago the way it often happens, searching for something specific (images of window boxes) that leads you somewhere else. I really enjoy the photos she posts and I was happy to discover she had a book coming out. Of course I pre-ordered it right away. This is a really great visual book because it captures so many things that you take note of while on a trip to Europe. Unfortunately, they are soon forgotten because you don't always photograph them yourself. Colors, textures, typography...all the little details. I was looking for a book to keep me inspired while I work on designing and launching a line of products to be made in Italy, and it really helps to give me a quick little dose of Europe.

I loved it and the person I bought it for did as well.

This is a beautiful book. My wife and I last visited Paris 7 years ago. While we visited & enjoyed all of the typical tourist stops, it was our meandering detours through Paris' residential neighborhoods that made our trip so special. We tripped over cafe's, crepe stands, street fairs, parks and many hidden yet wonderful architectural designs. It was also on this trip we discovered my wife was pregnant with our 1st child! Of course while that made our trip extra special - that was our last European vacation alone. So I bought Paris In Color on (after spying it in an Anthropologie store) as an anniversary gift to my wife. These subtly gorgeous pictures (cleverly divided up by color segments) brought our Paris adventure back to life along with all of the wonderful emotions that we associated with that trip. It made for a very special gift and has inspired us to revisit Paris next year!
