I was a test panelist for this book before it came out and lost a pound a day for the first two weeks. The premise that that added sugars "not all sugars are making us fat. It's got new research about how companies are making you fat by hiding in in your foods (even spaghetti sauce and salads), and then gives you recipes and more than 500 foods to eat instead, leading to rapid weight loss. I signed up because my doctor said I was at risk of diabetes. My wife and I ended up losing 15 pounds. I stayed on the plan and kept losing weight, which became easier as my brain got rewired and didn't crave sugar anymore. It's amazing what happens when you know how to target the one darn thing making you fat.

Easy to understand for a lay person. Short and simple instructions. Gives brand names for best food choices. Lists breakdown of food .

I have changed my attitude about processed food. I will be more weary. I highly recommend this book. It is worth it to be educated about what you eat.

I saw Dave Zinczenko on Good Morning America and had to buy this book after seeing that there's a whole doughnut's worth of sugar in my store-bought spaghetti sauce! Glad I did. Here's what you're getting: The first few chapters explain how food manufacturers are making us fat, and about how the author helped a ton of people lose weight by eliminating their added sugars. Then we get to the diet itself, which seems purposefully manageable and not too restrictive (three meals and one snack a day for the first 14 days; then there's a maintenance program). The recipes are completely added-sugar-free, and there's a guide with 500+ products that are sugar-free. I contacted one of the test panelists on Facebook and she said it really worked; she lost 10 pounds and doesn't crave sweets as much. I think anything that helps Americans free themselves from sugar is good, and weight loss inevitable.

Informative book that provides the reader with an exciting plan to control your sugar intake levels.
