K-Gr 2-This series teaches money basics by putting diverse characters into familiar financial situations. For example, in Ella, Ella wants to earn money to purchase a $20 soccer ball. Her mom gives her $2 for allowance, of which she saves 75 cents, shares 25 cents, and puts $1 in her spend jar. Ella then does extra chores, helps neighbors, sells an old game, and finally gets the last amount from grandma after helping her clean the garage. The way the kids earn money, sell items, and interact with parents and other adults is realistic and encouraging. Some of the financials are simplified: there is never any tax to consider, and when selling candy for a camping trip, the cost of the product is not discussed-the entire sale is treated as profit. The illustrations are bold and bright and support the texts. The books all end with an appealing activity. Overall, this series would be valuable at home and at school to prompt discussions about money management. (c) Copyright

I used this book (and the others in the series by the same author) to create a Money Smart kids program in our Day Camp program (5-10yr olds). The books are good introductions to the topics and help kids understand the ideas. We have used some of the activities in the books as the projects we do with the kids. We started this last summer (2016) and repeated this again (2017) and the kids were still interested in seeing the books again. Fun story. When we start camp we talk about money in general (where you get it, what it looks like). When we asked each kid what you buy with money most listed "food", "clothes", "water", and such. Then one kid said "toys!". Two kids responded, "that's a Want not a Need!" Awesome!

This is an awesome book that I use to teach needs and wants. I love all of the Cloverleaf products but this one in particular is just perfect! It goes into a story that proposes a problem for one of the characters that needs a solution (one of the best way to teach in the earlier grades). It also goes ties into spending and saving as well as goods and services.

Used this to instill differences between wants and needs with my granddaughter.

This is a great book to support a unit for a Kindergarten/Grade 1 Social Studies unit on 'Needs and Wants'. The text level is a little more difficult than Needs and Wants by Gilla Olson or Wants Versus Needs - A Place to live by Linda Staniford, but the pictures are very engaging and encourage classroom discussion. I would suggest reading this book after reading the other two books previously mentioned.

my daughter loves it

This is the BEST financial literacy book for kids! It covers the basics extremely well and gives hints of questions to ask the child for his/her feedback. I bought an assortment of financial education books for my grandchildren and this, by far, was the best of them all.

Great book for children to learn the difference! My 5-year-old niece lost interest... and I read with inflection. It's hard to keep them interested in things that matter...

My 6 year old granddaughter adores this colorful and educational book. Its a favorite at bedtime.
